

CONTRIBUTORS/COLLABORATEURS

Graeme Wynn is a member of the Department of Geography at the University of British Columbia and has published extensively on the historical geography of the Maritimes.

L.D. McCann teaches historical geography at Mount Allison University and is the author of Canadian Resource Towns: A Geographical Perspective.

A frequent contributor to Acadiensis, Jack Bumsted is a member of the History Department at the University of Manitoba and is currently engaged in preparing a multi-volume edition of the Papers of Lord Selkirk.

Peter Ennals is a member of the Department of Geography at Mount Allison University and a member of the editorial board of volume II of the National Historical Atlas of Canada.

Deryck Holdsworth is an urban historical geographer currently teaching at the University of Toronto. His published works include studies on early suburban development in Vancouver and Toronto, early prefabricated housing in Western Canada, and the impact of industrialization on house forms in the Maritimes.

Rosemary E. Ommer is a member of the Maritime History Group at Memorial University of Newfoundland and the author of a number of papers on the economic history of the Atlantic region.

One of Canada's most distinguished historical geographers, Cole Harris teaches at the University of British Columbia and is the general editor of volume II of the National Historical Atlas of Canada.

A graduate in historical geography of the University of British Columbia, Joan M. Schwartz is an archivist with the National Photography Collection at the Public Archives of Canada.

Stephen Hornsby, a graduate of St. Andrews University, is a Commonwealth Scholar in the Ph.D. programme in historical geography at the University of British Columbia. He is embarking on a study of Cape Breton Island in the nineteenth century.

M. Brook Taylor is currently enrolled in the Ph.D. programme in history at the University of Toronto and is engaged in the study of the writing of English Canadian history in the nineteenth century.

Terry Crowley teaches in the History Department at the University of Guelph. He is currently completing a manuscript on Louisbourg.