

CONTRIBUTORS/COLLABORATEURS

DEL MUISE, a member of the History Department at Carleton University, is working on a major research project on the effects of industrialization in three Nova Scotian towns. ROBERT MACKINNON, who teaches geography at Cariboo University College in Kamloops, B.C., recently completed a Ph.D. dissertation on "The Historical Geography of Agriculture in Nova Scotia, 1851-1951". Associate Professor in the School of Education at Dalhousie University, ANNE WOOD is completing a monograph on the first hundred years of Pictou Academy. WENDY OWEN, who teaches history at St. John's Ravenscourt School in Winnipeg, is working on a project about women and inheritance in rural communities in Manitoba and Prince Edward Island. Well known to Acadiensis readers, JACK BUMSTED, Professor of History at the University of Manitoba, is the author of Land, Settlement and Politics on 18th-Century Prince Edward Island. Formerly the Executive Director of the Gorsebrook Research Institute, ANDERS SANDBERG is a Canada Research Fellow in the Department of Geography at York University, where he is continuing his research on forest capitalism in 20th century Nova Scotia. THOMAS R. ROACH, an author and researcher associated with Commonwealth Historic Resource Management Ltd. and Paradigm Communications, has published on the history of forestry and conservation in Canada and Africa. A member of the History Department at the University of Maine, RICHARD JUDD is the author of several articles on the politics of conservation in Maine and of Aroostook: A History of Logging in Northern Maine. NICOLAS LANDRY is Dean of Studies at the Centre universitaire de Shippagan and is currently involved in the Chignecto Canal Project, 1823-1970. MICHAEL GAUVREAU teaches history at McMaster University and is the author of The Evangelical Century: College and Creed in English Canada From the Great Revival to the Great Depression. A member of the History Department at the University of Guelph, CATHARINE ANNE WILSON is currently working on a study of tenancy in 19th century Ontario. DAVID FRANK, who needs no introduction to readers of this journal, is a member of the History Department at the University of New Brunswick and Editor of Acadiensis for the next three years.