

CONTRIBUTORS/COLLABORATEURS

IAN MCKAY received his PhD from Dalhousie University and is a post-doctoral fellow at Saint Mary's University. The co-editor of New Maritimes, he is the author of a number of studies of the working class in the Maritimes, including A Craft Transformed. GREG MARQUIS received his MA from the University of New Brunswick and is currently completing a PhD at Queen's University on "Toronto Police Institutions 1910-1940". A graduate of Carleton and York Universities, KEN CRUIKSHANK is currently working on a PhD thesis at York on "The Limits of Regulation: Railway Freight Rate Regulation and the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada, 1850-1929". KRIS INWOOD is an assistant professor of Economics at Saint Mary's University and the author of The Canadian Charcoal Iron Industry, 1870-1914; JOHN CHAMARD is a professor of Management at Saint Mary's and the author of a study of entrepreneurship in Nova Scotia. The two are currently working on a machine-readable file of the 1870 census data for manufacturing in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. A graduate of Acadia and Harvard, P.E.L. SMITH is a professor of Anthropology, Old World Archaeology and Prehistory at the Université de Montréal and has published a number of books and over 60 articles and reports on prehistoric archaeological research. A professor of History at the University of Maine, ROBERT BABCOCK is the author of Gompers in Canada and of a number of studies comparing the impact of industrial capital development in Maine and New Brunswick. MARGARET CONRAD teaches history and Canadian Studies at Acadia University and is the author of George Nowlan: Maritime Conservative in National Politics. She has published extensively in the field of women's studies and is co-author of a soon to be released study of women's diaries in Nova Scotia. Professeur chargé d'enseignement à l'Université du Québec à Chicoutimi, CAMIL GIRARD was a co-author of Laterrire, un village au Saguenay and is working on a history of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean. Brian Young teaches history at McGill University and is the author of George-Etienne Cartier: Montreal Bourgeois and In its Corporate Capacity: the Seminary of Montreal as a Business Institution, 1816-76. A professor of History at Trent University, BRUCE W. HODGINS is the author of numerous books and articles on the Canadian North and has just edited with Margaret Hobbs a collection of essays entitled Nastawgan: The Canadian North by Canoe and Snowshoe. SHELAGH GRANT teaches in the History and Canadian Studies Departments at Trent and is currently completing a book which focuses on the impact of government policies in the northern Territories during the 1940s. A professor of History at the University of Manitoba and Fellow of St. John's College, J.M. BUMSTED is following his own advice and is attempting in several projects to communicate with the general audience for historical writing.