The first issue of the IFR has been received with enthusiasm by many scholars in different parts of the world.

Some were "particularly impressed by the variety of the contents" and the "high quality" of the articles. Others were "especially pleased by [our ] selection of a very readable and neat type" and appreciated the "extreme care with which [we ] set up and proofread" the material. All agreed that the IFR has the potentiality to become "an important journal" and to occupy "a significant place in literary studies from now on."

Many suggestions have been made, most of them with regard to extrinsic questions, a few in connection with intrinsic matters, but all of them were very reassuring and encouraging. We wish, therefore, to thank our readers and contributors for their concern and interest and we assure them of our appreciation and gratitude.
