

CONTRIBUTORS

Patrick Armstrong is a defence scientist with the Directorate of Land Operational Research, Department of National Defence, Ottawa. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto and received his Ph.D. in War Studies from King's College, University of London.

David Charters is Deputy Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies. His doctorate thesis dealt with insurgency and counter-insurgency in Palestine, 1945-47, and he is the author of many articles in the field of low intensity conflict. He has also lectured on Internal War at the University of New Brunswick since 1977.

Richard Gillespie is a junior research fellow in politics at St. John's College, Oxford, having previously lectured in Latin American Politics at the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. His doctoral thesis, The Peronist Left, followed 16 months research in Argentina, and he has written several articles on guerrilla warfare in that country. His book on the Montoneros, Soldiers of Perón, will be published shortly, and his next work will be about the post-Civil War history of the Spanish Socialist Party.

Dominick Graham is Professor of History at the University of New Brunswick and Associate Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies. He is the author of Cassino and British Politics and American Defence 1748-1756, and is currently writing on British Army doctrine in two world wars.

Brian Grosman, Q.C., partner in Greenglass and Grosman, Toronto, was formerly Professor of Law at the University of Saskatchewan and founding chairman of the Saskatchewan Law Reform Commission. He is a graduate of the University of Toronto, Osgoode Hall Law School and McGill University. His published works include The Prosecutor: An Inquiry into the Exercise of Discretion, Police Command: Decisions and Discretion, and New Directions in Sentencing, as well as many articles.

Maurice Tugwell is Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies, University of New Brunswick. He is the author of The Unquiet Peace, Airborne to Battle and Arnhem: A Case Study, and during his military career he served in Palestine, Cyprus, Malaya, Aden, Iran and Northern Ireland.