

CONTRIBUTORS

David Charters is Deputy Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies. He is a graduate of the University of New Brunswick and received his Ph.D. in War Studies from King's College, University of London. The author of many articles in the field of low intensity conflict, he has lectured on internal war at the University of New Brunswick since 1977.

Frederick Donnelly is Assistant Professor of History at the University of New Brunswick, Saint John Campus. A graduate of Carleton University, he received his Ph.D. from Sheffield University and has published several articles on modern British social history.

Paul Moorcraft is a South African who has taught Political Science at the University of Rhodesia and the University of Capetown. He is at present Editor-in-Chief of The College Press in Salisbury, Zimbabwe.

Norman Reddaway, a graduate of King's College, Cambridge, was Britain's Ambassador to Poland in the late 1970s, at the conclusion of a diplomatic career which had taken him to Rome, Ottawa, Beirut, Singapore and Khartoum.

Reginald Roy is Professor of Military and Strategic Studies, University of Victoria. After service in World War II with the Cape Breton Highlanders, he worked on the official history of the Canadian Army. Since then he has written many articles on military topics and five books, the most recent being a biography of Major-General G.R. Pearkes, VC.

Maurice Tugwell is Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies, University of New Brunswick. He is the author of The Unquiet Peace, Airborne to Battle and Arnhem: A Case Study, and during his military career he served in Palestine, Cyprus, Malaya, Aden, Iran and Northern Ireland. His Ph.D. dissertation dealt with revolutionary propaganda.