

CONTRIBUTORS

G. Patrick Armstrong is Head, War Game Methodology Section in the Directorate of Land Operational Research, National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa. A graduate in philosophy from the University of Toronto, he received a Ph.D. in War Studies from King's College, University of London, in 1976.

Luiz de Aguiar Costa-Pinto is Professor of Sociology at the University of Waterloo, Ontario. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Brazil in 1947, and since the mid-1950s has held a number of teaching, fellowships, research and consultative positions in Canada, the United States and Brazil. He is the author or co-author of more than two dozen books, predominantly on economic development and social change in Latin America.

Norman Frankel is an editor with St. James' Press in Chicago, and currently is writing a book on the organization of political science serial literature. His research interests include conflict analysis, British, Irish and Israeli societies, and terrorism. This is his second article in Conflict Quarterly on Ulster's electoral politics.

Efraim Inbar teaches political science at Bar-Ilan University. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago. His main area of interest is national security issues in the Middle East. He has written extensively on the subject of Israeli strategy and foreign policy.

Bohdan Krawchenko is Research Associate and Assistant Director of the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta. He received his D.Phil. from St. Antony's College, Oxford University.

Joel J. Sokolsky is an instructor in Canadian Studies at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, Washington, D.C. Currently a Ph.D. candidate in Government at Harvard University, he has published several articles on Canadian defence policy.