

CONTRIBUTORS

David Charters is Executive Editor of Conflict Quarterly and Deputy Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies at the University of New Brunswick.

Michael M. Gunter is Professor of Political Science at Tennessee Technological University. A graduate of Columbia and Kent State Universities, he is the author of International Terrorism: The Armenian Case (Westport, Connecticut: Greenwood Press, forthcoming 1986).

Abraham H. Miller is Professor of Political Science at the University of Cincinnati. He was editor of Terrorism: the Media and the Law (Dobbs Ferry, N.Y.: Transnational Publishers, 1982) and has written numerous articles on aspects of terrorism.

James B. Motley is Director, National Security Studies, for Defense Systems Inc., in McLean, Virginia. A graduate of The Citadel and Florida State University, Dr. Motley received his Ph.D. from Catholic University. A Vietnam veteran, he has written widely on the subject of terrorism, including U.S. Strategy to Counter Domestic Political Terrorism (Washington, D.C.: National Defense University Press, 1983).

Gerard F. Rutan is Professor of Political Science and Canadian Studies at Western Washington University, Bellingham, Washington.

Harold Sims is Professor of History at the University of Pittsburgh. He has published three books and several articles on Mexican and Nicaraguan history. This article is a follow-up to his earlier analysis of Nicaraguan-Communist relations, published in the Winter 1985 issue of the Quarterly.