

CONTRIBUTORS

Nicholas O. Berry is chairman of the Political Science Department at Ursinus College in Pennsylvania. In 1965-86 he was a Fulbright Professor in the Department of Political Studies at the University of Auckland, New Zealand. His article was initially presented as a paper at the International Academic Conference on Terrorism at the University of Aberdeen in April 1986.

David Charters is Director of the Centre for Conflict Studies at the University of New Brunswick and Executive Editor of Conflict Quarterly.

Timothy J. Lomperis is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Duke University. His most recent book, Reading the Wind: the Literature of the Vietnam War, was published by Duke University Press in December 1986.

Bowman H. Miller is Chief, Northern and Central Europe Division, Office of Analysis for Western Europe, Bureau of Intelligence and Research, at the U.S. Department of State. He received his Ph.D. from Georgetown University, and has published and lectured frequently on aspects of terrorism.

Sabri Sayari is a consultant at the Rand Corporation's Security and Subnational Conflict Program. He has been a faculty member at Bogazici University in Istanbul, and has held visiting appointments at a number of Western European and American universities. He has published numerous articles on various aspects of Turkey's domestic politics and foreign policy.

Bruce W. Warner is currently completing his Ph.D. dissertation on the legal response to international political violence for the University of Exeter, England. He is a graduate of the universities of Winnipeg and Manitoba. This article is based on the revision of his paper presented at the International Academic Conference on Terrorism at the University of Aberdeen in April 1986.