

CONTRIBUTORS

Ernest Evans teaches in the Department of International Studies at Rhodes College, Memphis, Tennessee. A graduate of Brown University and MIT, he has taught at Catholic University and Georgetown. His most recent book is Wars Without Splendor: the U.S. Military and Low-Level Conflict (Greenwood Press, 1987).

Loch K. Johnson is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Georgia. A graduate of the University of California, he has served on the staff of both the House and Senate Intelligence Committees. He is author of A Season of Inquiry: the Senate Intelligence Investigation (University Press of Kentucky, 1985).

Richard C. Martin is Chairman of the Department of Religious Studies at Arizona State University. His field of scholarly expertise is Middle East religions and the relationship between religion and violence. His article "Striving in the Path of Allah: a Fundamentalist Interpretation of Jihad in Egypt," was published in the Spring 1987 edition of Conflict Quarterly.

Jerrold Post is Professor of Psychiatry and Public Policy at George Washington University. He received his M.D. from Yale, and did post-graduate training at Harvard, Johns Hopkins, and the National Institute of Mental Health. His career has been focused solely on political psychology, particularly charismatic leader-follower relationships and the psychology of terrorist groups, upon which he has published extensively.

Gary Prevost is Associate Professor of Government at Saint John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota. A graduate of the University of Minnesota, he has published widely on politics in Spain, Cuba and Latin America.

W. Andrew Terrill is a Research Associate with Analytical Assessments Corporation, Los Angeles. A graduate of the University of California (Riverside), he received his Ph.D. in international relations from the Claremont Graduate School, where his research was on Jordan's role among the Arab states. He has since published several articles on Middle Eastern international politics.