

CONTRIBUTORS

Elizabeth M. Boles is a PhD candidate in Political Science at the University of California, Berkeley. She is presently completing her dissertation on U.S. policy toward revolutionary situations in South Africa, the Philippines, and Iran. She is the author of "The West and South Africa: Myths, Interests, and Policy Options," an Atlantic Paper published January 1988.

Richard Dale is Associate Professor of Political Science at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, Illinois. A graduate of Bowdoin College, Maine, and Ohio State, he received his PhD from Princeton University. He is a specialist in the politics of southern Africa and has published extensively in that field.

Norman Frankel is a Chicago-based writer, whose interests include conflict analysis and Middle East politics. Editor of over a dozen books, he serves on the editorial board of Political Communication and Persuasion journal.

Randall W. Heather is a doctoral candidate in military history at Cambridge University, where he is researching the British counterinsurgency campaign against the Mau-Mau. A graduate of the University of New Brunswick, where his MA thesis examined the changing role of the British Army in Northern Ireland, Mr. Heather has worked as a political risk analyst for the Bank of Montreal. He is author of "Terrorism, Active Measures and SDI," Mackenzie Papers no. 3 (1987).

Daniel S. Papp is Professor of International Affairs and Director of the School of Social Sciences at Georgia Tech in Atlanta. A graduate of Dartmouth, he received his PhD from the University of Miami and has taught at the Army War College and the Air University. He is a specialist on Soviet military and foreign policy and his publications have earned him a high reputation for scholarship in that field.

Joseph M. Scolnick, Jr. is Professor of Political Science at Clinch Valley College of the University of Virginia. A graduate of the University of Virginia, he received his PhD from the University of Kentucky. He has published and presented scholarly papers in his field of expertise, which is the relationship between external conflict and domestic politics.

W. Andrew Terrill is an Adjunct Assistant Professor of Diplomacy and World Affairs at Occidental College. He also teaches at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, and is a consultant for the Systems Research and Development Corporation. From 1978 to 1987 Dr. Terrill was a staff researcher for the Analytical Assessments Corporation. He is the author of numerous articles; this is his second contribution to Conflict Quarterly.