

CONTRIBUTORS

Ernest Evans is an assistant professor at Christendom College in Front Royal, Virginia. He is author of Calling a Truce to Terror: The American Response to International Terrorism and Wars Without Splendor: The U.S. Military and Low-Level Conflict.

Glenn Hastedt is Associate Professor of Political Science at James Madison University in Virginia. He received his doctorate from Indiana University and has taught at the State University of New York. He is author of several studies on American intelligence policy issues.

David M. Horner is a member of staff of the Joint Services Staff College in Canberra, Australia. He is author of several works on Australian military history and defense issues, including SAS: Phantoms of the Jungle, a History of the Australian Special Air Service (1989).

Reuben Miller was until recently a professor of Political Science at Old Dominion University in Virginia. His doctoral dissertation from the University of Denver, focused on governments' policies and responses to acts of international terrorism. His areas of interest include: politics in the Middle East, American Foreign and Defense policies, and terrorism.

Miron Rezun is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of New Brunswick. He received his PhD at the University of Geneva and has taught at Queen's University. Among his publications on the Middle East and the Soviet Union is his book, The Soviet Union and Iran.

David M. Snelbecker is a graduate student at Harvard University's John F. Kennedy School of Government. He received his bachelor's degree from Princeton University where he wrote a thesis on the internal and external forces shaping Nicaragua since the 1979 Revolution.

James L. Zackrison lived in Latin America for sixteen years, several of these in Colombia during the last years of La Violencia. He holds master's degrees from Loma Linda University and California State University, San Bernardino. He currently works for the U.S. Army as an assistant editor at the National Defense University Press in Washington, D.C.