

CONTRIBUTORS

Neil K. Adams is Head of Social Studies at Kennebecasis Valley High School in New Brunswick. In 1989 he completed a Master's thesis in the Department of History at the University of New Brunswick entitled, "The influence of technology on the cause and conduct of the Ashanti War, 1873-74."

Mario Azevedo is Chair and Frank Porter Professor in the Department of Afro-American and African Studies at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte. Originally from Mozambique, he received his PhD in African History from Duke University in 1975. His works include Africa and Its People (1982), as well as articles in numerous journals.

John M. Carland is a historian at the United States Army Center of Military History where he is writing a volume on Army combat operations in Vietnam, 1965-66. He received his PhD in British Imperial History from the University of Toronto in 1977. He has published works dealing with British policy in West Africa before 1914, including The Colonial Office and Nigeria, 1898-1914.

Helena Cobban is a member of the International Institute for Strategic Studies. Recently she was a Visiting Peace Fellow at the George Mason University Center for Conflict Analysis and Resolution, where she prepared a second edition of her 1984 book, The Palestinian Liberation Organization: People, power and politics. Her latest work is Beyond crisis management? The super-powers and the Syrian-Israeli military theater.

Peter Gill is Senior Lecturer in Politics and Criminal Justice at Liverpool Polytechnic, England. He is co-author of Introduction to Politics and has had several articles on the oversight of Canadian security intelligence published. He is currently researching further into the control and oversight of domestic security intelligence agencies.

Yvon Grenier is a postdoctoral research associate at the Center for Latin American Studies, University of Pittsburgh. He has published articles on guerrilla warfare, violence and political transition in Latin America, and is the author of Gouverne politique et guerre interne au El Salvador, 1977-82 (forthcoming). He is presently studying the role of universities in the political transition in El Salvador.

Michael M. Gunter is Professor of Political Science at Tennessee Technological University. He has published extensively on Armenian terrorism, including "Pursuing the Just Cause of Their People": A Study of Contemporary Armenian Terrorism (1986). His latest book is The Kurds in Turkey: A Political Dilemma (1990).

P. Edward Haley is Senior Research Associate at the Keck Center for International Strategic Studies and Professor of International Relations at Claremont

McKenna College and Claremont Graduate School. Previously he served on the staffs of members of the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate, and as Dean of the School of International Studies, University of the Pacific. His publications include Qaddafi and the United States Since 1969 (1984), and Overtaken by Events: George Bush and the World (forthcoming).

Robert E. Harkavy is a professor of political science at the Pennsylvania State University, specializing in national security policy, arms control, and US foreign policy. He is a consultant to the Office of the Secretary of Defense. He earlier served with the Atomic Energy Commission and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. Among his publications is Bases Abroad: the Global Foreign Military Presence.

Bruce Hoffman is a staff member in the Security and Subnational Conflict Research Program at the RAND Corporation, where he studies terrorist organizations and issues relating to low-intensity conflict. He received his doctorate from St. Antony's College, Oxford, and is author of The Failure of British Military Strategy Within Palestine, 1939-1947 (1983), and numerous articles on terrorism.

Robert L. Scheina is the current Department of Transportation Chair at the Industrial College of the Armed Forces in Washington where he teaches Latin American military history and regional studies. Annually he writes the Latin American region review for the International Navies Issue of the U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings. His most recent book is Latin America; a Naval History 1810-1987 (1987).

Frank Uhlig, Jr. is Editor of the Naval War College Review at the U.S. Naval War College in Newport, Rhode Island. For several years he was also head of the college's advanced research program. He is editor of Vietnam: The Naval Story (1986).