

CONTRIBUTORS

Sean K. Anderson is a doctoral candidate in Political Science at the University of Oklahoma. He was formerly chief English language editor for the International Department of the Pars News Agency (now renamed the Islamic Republic News Agency) in Tehran, Iran from August 1980 until August 1982.

G.P. Armstrong is a Soviet analyst in the Department of National Defence, Ottawa. He received his PhD in War Studies from King's College, London. He has written extensively on Soviet foreign policy and military affairs and is a frequent contributor to Conflict Quarterly.

David Close is Professor of Political Science at The Memorial University of Newfoundland.

William DeMars is completing his doctoral dissertation on "International Organizations and the Ethiopian Conflict in the 1980s" in the Department of Government and International Studies at the University of Notre Dame. During the 1990-91 academic year he received the Albert Gallatin Fellowship in International Affairs to do dissertation field research in Europe and Ethiopia from a base at the Graduate Institute of International Studies in Geneva, Switzerland.

Ernest Evans is the head of the Washington, DC office of the International Analysis Center, a Columbia University-based research center specializing in problems of political conflict. He is author of Calling a Truce to Terror: The American Policy Response to International Terrorism, and Wars Without Splendor: The U.S. Military and Low-Level Conflict.

Roger Hamburg is Professor of Political Science, Indiana University at South Bend. He is a specialist in Soviet foreign and defense policy. He has recently published articles and review essays in Conflict Quarterly and Problems of Communism.

Randall W. Heather is a doctoral candidate at St. Edmunds College, Cambridge, writing a dissertation on British counter-insurgency in the Mau Mau campaign. The former head of the International Assessment Office of the Bank of Montreal, he is currently Senior Analyst with the Strategic Monitoring Service, and commentator on terrorism for the London desk of ABC News.

Richard A. Hunt is Chief of the Oral History Branch of the Center of Military History, Washington, DC.

Eric Laferriere is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Political Science at McGill University. He is writing a dissertation that examines environmental issues and their implications for North-South relations.

Kenneth G. Robertson is Director of Defense and Internal Security Studies at the University of Reading, UK. He is the author of three books and has regularly contributed to Conflict Quarterly and other periodicals. He specializes in intelligence and terrorism and has recently been working on international police intelligence cooperation.

David E. Schmitt is Brooke Professor of Political Science at Northeastern University in Boston. He has written extensively on Northern Ireland, political development and bicomunal societies. Among his publications are The Irony of Irish Democracy: The Impact of Political Culture on Administrative and Democratic Political Development in Ireland and Dynamics of the Third World (editor).

Charles L. Stansifer is Professor of History at the University of Kansas, and was director of the University's Center of Latin American Studies from 1975 to 1989. He is the author of several books and articles on Central America and United States-Central American relations, and has served on several commissions of the Latin American Studies Association concerning recent events in Central America.

W. Andrew Terrill is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Old Dominion University, Norfolk, Virginia. He is author of numerous articles on Middle East politics and Third World national security themes.

Leonard Weinberg is Professor of Political Science at the University of Nevada, Reno. He has been a Fulbright senior research fellow at the University of Florence and is a member of the Committee on Political Sociology of the International Political Science Association. He is co-author of The Rise and Fall of Italian Terrorism (1987), and Introduction to Political Terrorism (1989).

Peter J. Woolley is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at Fairleigh Dickinson University, Madison, New Jersey, and an associate of the University's Applied Research Center.