

Letter to the Editor

Dear International Hydrographic Review,

You published a paper by David Pugh (University of Southampton) and John Hunter (University of Tasmania), et al., in your November 2002 issue, about a study of a sea level benchmark struck at Port Arthur, Tasmania, in 1841 by Sir James Clark Ross, comparing it to modern sea levels.

I have also studied this benchmark, and the evidence surrounding it, for some 4 years and have reached findings very different to those of the above authors.

For your information, my interpretation is published in two parts here - www.john-daly.com/deadisle

Regards,

John Daly
