Part I expounds the general problem of morpholithological structure along sea coast with particular reference to the shores of the Mediterranean, accompanied by various deductions of a general order on the physiographical and sedimentary elevation of the coastal "platform".

Part II analyses the mechanism applying to the morpholithological construction of certain specified areas such as the Delta of the Nile, those of the Po and the Rhone, and various other littoral structures.

Several coloured plates which accompany the volume bring out clearly the details of these shoreline formations.
