JOHN HEWSON—A FESTSCHRIFT

Dr. John Hewson's appointment to Memorial University's Henrietta Harvey Chair in May 1997 marked 37 years of distinguished service as scholar, teacher and administrator.

Dr. Hewson, an APLA member since the early days of our association and a scholar of national and international reputation, cannot be pinned down to any particular specialization: one could say that he has had a distinguished career in several branches of Linguistics. His scholarly achievements in General Linguistics, Theoretical Linguistics, Historical Linguistics, Amerindian, and Romance Linguistics are impressive in both quality and quantity. His CV lists 14 completed books (with 3 more in preparation), 141 published papers and reviews, and 93 papers to Learned Societies, including, for example, the closing address of the final plenary session of the most recent International Congress of Linguists (a world event staged every five years), held in Québec in 1992.

His energetic research in a broad spectrum of Linguistics is demonstrated by the quantity of research funding it has attracted. He has been awarded a grand total of some $300,000 during the 30 years between 1967 and 1996, an impressive record for any professor in the humanities. In the eighties Memorial University acknowledged his rare contribution to the discipline of linguistics by bestowing on him the title of University Research Professor (1985-1990).

Dr. Hewson has had an enormously active career not only as a scholar but as one vigorously engaged in the development of his discipline. He was instrumental in the establishment of Newfoundland's first language laboratory on his arrival at Memorial in 1960, and after eight years as resident linguist in the Department of French, he teamed up with Herbert Halpert, a folklorist in the Department of English, to persuade the University authorities to create the two new Departments of Folklore and Linguistics, both of which have since played a pioneering and vital role in the mandate of the University. Hewson was then made Head of the new Department of Linguistics in 1968 and promoted to full Professor in recognition of the role he had played in the Department of French where he had published two manuals of exercises for the Language Laboratory, numerous papers, obtained one of the first Canada Council Research Grants (to work on the Beothuk vocabularies), and in his last year (1967-8) been Acting Head of French in difficult circumstances. In the first of his sixteen years as Department Head of Linguistics, while getting the new department off the ground, he was also Chair of the Undergraduate Studies Committee of the newly created Faculty of Arts, and Vice-Chair of the Faculty Council.

In the 1960s he had also become very active in the Canadian Linguistics Association (CLA), serving for several years as program organizer of the annual meetings. In the 1970s he became a member of the CLA executive, in 1978-80 Vice-President, and in 1980-82 President. It was also in the 1970s, while building up our Linguistics Department from two members to eight, that he created, by means of a succession of Canada Council Research Grants, a world first in the use of the computer in the reconstruction of prehistoric protolanguages (in the days when computer technology was limited to the use of capital letters).

This path has now been followed by others, who have recognized his seminal role (see Martine Mazaudon and John Lowe, Bulletin de la Société Linguistique de Paris 1991: 49-78). Hewson has commented that the 'Reconstruction Engine' of Mazaudon and Lowe 'is like a modern automobile in comparison to my Model-T Ford of the 1970s'. The major result of his project, A Computer-Generated Dictionary of Proto-Algonquian (1993), containing over 4,000 reconstructed words of a prehistoric language, is an indispensable research tool for any Algonquianist, and is still the only protolanguage dictionary that has ever been produced by computer methodology. There are two further volumes from this project, Proto-Algonquian Word Formatives and Proto-Algonquian Roots, awaiting a final edit before publication. The latter two volumes inaugurate a new style of computer analysis of the word formatives of polysynthetic languages, which can be used not only for historical reconstruction, but also for synchronic analysis, as shown by Hewson's colleague Larry Smith in his volume A Survey of the Derivational Postbases of Labrador Innuttut (1978) and eventually by one of Hewson's students, Stephanie Inglis, in her thesis The Fundamentals of Micmac Word Formation (1987).

Hewson is also, dating from his graduate work at Université Laval in Quebec City, one of the two major English-speaking commentators (with Walter Hirtle) on the psychomechanical theories of the French linguist Gustave Guillaume, whose work, as a significant extension of the European linguistic thought pioneered by Ferdinand de Saussure, is now considered an interesting prelude to the modern interest in Cognitive Linguistics. Hewson and Hirtle published, in 1984, a translation of crucial selections of Guillaume's own writings, with valuable exegetic commentaries, under the title Foundations for a Science of Language (Amsterdam: Benjamins). The Canadian Linguistic Association recognized Hewson's special role in the explication of Guillaumian theory by asking him to be a guest editor for the 1981 issue of the Canadian Journal of Linguistics which was dedicated to Guillaumian psychomechanics. He is also recognized as an important commentator on Saussure, and regularly teaches the Saussure section of an MPhil in Humanities course at Memorial University.

Hewson's early work on Algonquian languages, which led to his attempt to demonstrate a linguistic affinity between Beothuk and Algonquian (Hewson 1968, 1971, and his 1979 monograph The Beothuk Vocabularies) established him as the world expert on the Beothuk language. And it eventually led him, after working on Cree, Ojibway, Fox and Menomini, to work on the language of the Innu of Labrador, on which he collaborated with native speakers whom he encouraged to enrol in courses at Memorial. This ultimately led to his involvement with the setting up of the MUNNTEP program for the training of native Innu and Inuit teachers, and his traveling to Labrador twice a year to supervise the programs and to deliver courses himself in the teaching of Innu-aimun. At the same time he was actively working on the language of the Newfoundland Micmac: he did field work in Conne River in the days when the only access was by boat. He recorded the last fluent speakers of Newfoundland Micmac, put together a text for teaching Micmac in the school at Conne River (Klusuagney Wi'katikn, 1978), and eventually, in collaboration with Bernard Francis, a native speaker of Micmac from Sydney, Cape Breton Island, produced an English language rewrite of Father Pacifique's Micmac grammar (originally in French, with an inadequate Micmac orthography) to which new features, such as an Index of 3,000 Micmac words, were added (1991).

The Department of Linguistics that Hewson founded at Memorial has been one of the most active of the University's Arts Departments. It has produced a couple of dozen Master's degrees, 16 of them directed by Hewson himself, three PhDs, with another half dozen in progress (Hewson involved as either director or teacher with all of them); currently there are a dozen graduate students enrolled in the program. As student evaluation and comments show, he has been one of our most articulate and effective teachers, at both graduate and undergraduate levels.

Most recently (1997), Dr. Hewson was elected to the Royal Society of Canada, a rare distinction shared by only four other colleagues at Memorial University.

At a stage in life when many academics relax into lassitude, Dr. Hewson has published several books (three titles during the past two years) and is now voluntarily leading a graduate seminar on tense and aspect in the Bantu languages of Africa. This is further evidence of his boundless energy, his enthusiasm for new projects, and his capacity to inspire students.

John Hewson's work has followed his faith in the symmetries of human language. His belief that any language is a system of subsystems reminds us of those Greek philosophers who declared their faith in the underlying order of the whole universe. This is a preference for logos over chaos, for light over darkness, for desire over despair. In the final analysis, John's unflagging energy must flow from some ineffable source. His agile mind still leaps like a grasshopper, and it reminds us that James Joyce labelled T.S. Eliot a 'gracehoper'. We surmise that John too has been sustained by some hope of grace. But we are sure that he has been sustained by his love of music. May he sense the separate melodies of the papers here contributed by students, colleagues, and friends. And may he also sense the single harmony that gathered them together in his honour.
