

GLOSSARY OF NAMES

A.J. BANNERMAN was a lumberman and local politician of Liberal persuasion from Kenzieville.

JAMES CALDWELL, a senior police officer, became chief while Rose was with the force.

Col. THOMAS CANTLEY was Conservative M.P. for Pictou County.

CLIFFORD DANE, a labour organizer originally from Australia, was in 1920 president of the Nova Scotia Federation of Labour.

JOHN DOULL, brother-in-law of Alex McGregor, was mayor of New Glasgow in 1925 before winning election as M.L.A. for Pictou County.

J.C. DOUGLAS, a former mayor of Glace Bay veteran M.L.A., and one of the leading Conservatives in Cape Breton, resigned his post as provincial Attorney-General to contest Antigonish-Guysborough in the federal election of 1926.

SIR ANDREW RAE DUNCAN, a British lawyer with extensive industrial experience, investigated the labour-management problems of the coal industry as chairman of a provincial royal commission in 1925, and the problems and claims of the region as a whole as chairman of a federal royal commission in 1926.

JAMES A. FRASER was the ancient but peppery editor of the Liberal New Glasgow Eastern Chronicle. An anti-confederate in 1867, provincial M.L.A. and leading secessionist in the 1880's, Fraser was nominated by Pictou County Liberals in the federal election of 1926 as a symbol of regional protest. His skill at pungent invective was unequalled in the province.

J. STANLEY FRASER, a young defence lawyer often employed by those in the liquor trade, later became provincial organizer for the Conservatives in Nova Scotia.

R.D. GRAHAM was a prominent Liberal and defense lawyer often employed by those in the liquor trade.

Rev. D.K. GRANT was a lawyer and clergyman whom the newly-elected Conservative administration appointed chief temperance inspector for Nova Scotia.

GEORGE GRANT was a prominent New Glasgow businessman, councillor and mayor.

Rev. Dr. H.R. GRANT, a native Pictonian, was secretary of the provincial social service council and, from early in the century, the undisputed leader of the "dry" forces in Nova Scotia.

A.T. LOGAN was the chief of a corps of federal preventative officers in the province.

E.M. MACDONALD was a veteran Liberal M.P. for Pictou County and cabinet minister, who in 1925 won election in Antigonish-Guysborough.

ALEX MACGREGOR, a former M.P., was the reputed political boss and master-strategist for the Conservatives in Pictou County.

ROD G. MACKAY was the prosecuting lawyer against the liquor trade in New Glasgow.

TOM MACKAY was a former New Glasgow temperance inspector who became deputy-provincial inspector for eastern Nova Scotia.

DANNIE MACLENNAN was reputed to be the leading liquor retailer in New Glasgow.

AMY MASON, "Queen of the Smugglers" and a native Pictonian, was one of the major distributors of liquor in the province.

FRED MILLIGAN was a local Conservative politician, New Glasgow town councillor and businessman. His feud with Walter Weir disrupted party organization in the county particularly as related to the liquor trade.

PADDY NOLAN, ex-hockey player of note and Conservative protégé of Fred Milligan was permitted for a time to sell liquor in New Glasgow unmolested.

E.N. RHODES, an Ontario businessman formerly of Amherst, returned to Nova Scotia shortly before the election of 1925, secured the leadership of the provincial Conservative party, and led it to victory on a platform which featured a campaign for Maritime Rights.

BUDDIE was Clifford Rose's young son.

D.C. SINCLAIR was a New Glasgow magistrate of Liberal background.

WALTER WEIR was a local Conservative politician, ex-councillor and business associate of Tom MacKay.